Youth for Democracy!

*Let's strengthen democratic skills
by respecting basic human needs!*

Our Approach

Using an emotional-empathic approach, which assumes that all people regardless of their origin have the same basic needs, students learn to develop an empathic relationship with themselves and others, while acquiring a critical distance from emotionalising rhetoric.

By the help of our materials, young people learn to distinguish between constructive strategies for fulfilling their own basic needs and destructive ones in order to find solutions that serve the common good.

On this basis, different teaching modules and materials on the topic of democracy and human rights are offered, for which accompanying short videos are available.

Furthermore, a board game with a digital extension is being developed for use in class.

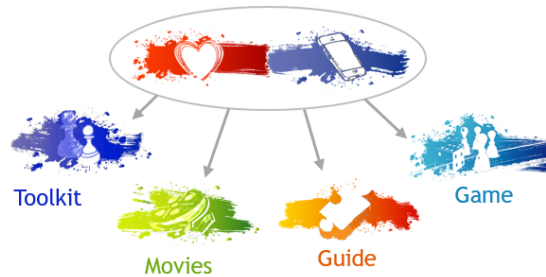

The Products

Online Platform

At the HEART Online Platform and Mobile App Teachers and headmasters find all necessary information and guide-lines for the implementation of the materials in school.

Online Platform & Mobile apps

Toolkit on Needs and Strategies

On the basis of exemplary situations in the history of democracy, students are to slip into the roles of the different protagonists and explore to what extent their basic needs are fulfilled.

They discuss different strategies that the persons concerned could implement to meet their basic needs and evaluate the functionality of these strategies in relation to the basic needs of others (human rights).

Short Movies

Students in 4 different European countries produce short movies on Milestones on the way to democracy: How did different protagonists experience them and how did they try to meet their basic needs?

ACT - Active Citizen Team-Game

This cooperative board-game with online-extensions deals with important issues of the present and the future. By playing this cooperative game, students train to think critically, reflect and better understand their own and others' motives/basic needs. They try out behaviors that are fundamental to civic engagement and participation based on the fulfilment of basic needs.

Module Guide for teachers

The Module Guide contains all the necessary materials and information to implement the products of the European Heart Project in the classroom.

Our Goals

In order to be able to deal with the urgent questions of the present and the future even better, it is important to further develop the democratic skills of young people in a contemporary manner:

- to take responsibility for oneself and others,
- to cultivate an empathetic approach to oneself and others,
- to engage in questions of democracy and human rights,
- to be able to actively inform oneself and form one's own opinion, and
- to participate actively in society.

Application fields

The materials are developed for use in history and ethics lessons, as well as for interdisciplinary projects on the topics of human rights, European values and political education. They are intended to make history tangible and to enable emotional learning from history, as well as to motivate active participation in society.
